CIA PROGRESS REPORT TO THE PSB:

SIGNIFICANT PSYCHOLOGICAL ACTIVITIES DURING THE FIRST QUARTER OF FY 1953

The outstanding development of the period under review has been the reorganization designed to strengthen the CIA structure for planning, conducting, and evaluating psychological operations. This reorganization represents the latest step in a series of reforms throughout CIA which were instituted by the present Director of Central Intelligence in the fall of 1950. It has been accompanied by a comprehensive reassessment of existing psychological activities and the termination of many which had proven ineffective, in many cases because of limited capabilities and the lack of qualified personnel.

specific conditions and in connection with stated aims. The inventory is being used by planning units in a country-by-country appraisal of the actual build-up of CIA psychological capabilities, as measured against PSB and CIA country planning.

25X1C Preliminary study of the inventory reveals that the CIA psychological effort as a whole has placed emphasis on mass propaganda, and that economic warfare capabilities have nowhere achieved noteworthy proportions. Beyond these general impressions, it is somewhat difficult in the absence of a national strategic plan (and related country plans) to appraise [REDACTED] build-up for each critical area against the requirements of the national psychological effort for that area.

In the development of strategic plans which will serve as the starting point in the operational planning activities of its member agencies, it is believed that the PSB should not overlook the concrete factor of critical targets (indigenous sources of power) in each area, nor that of enemy psychological activity directed toward those targets. Thorough consideration should be given in all strategic planning to available intelligence estimates of area situations and related enemy psychological activities, and member agencies should be advised of basic estimates or analyses adopted for national planning purposes.
